ANNOUNCER: And in local news, two more attendees from the Great Plains Rodeo that was held just across the border in Longview, Kansas, are reportedly suffering from a flu-like illness. A sixty-eight year old male and a fifty-seven year old diabetic female bring the total to eight. All are over 55. Three suffer from chronic illnesses including heart disease and diabetes. Symptoms include fever, chills, upset stomach, and vomiting. Some also complain of neck stiffness. The rally was sponsored two weeks ago by the Coleson College agricultural department and held in Crowley Event Center. The college is so far denying any connection between the illnesses and the event. For FBO, I’m Tamara Keith.

ANNOUNCER: This is your KMMM reporter speaking live from in front of the entrance to Wilderness Park in Koko Hawaii where a group of campers have been airlifted to United Hospital reportedly suffering from a flu-like illness. The campers range in age from 12 to 65. All are relatives who take an annual hike instead of gathering for a family reunion. Symptoms include fever, chills, upset stomach, vomiting, stiffness, and extreme fatigue. A ranger from the group in their camp extremely ill. The ranger called in assistance. We will carry the news conference live at 5 p.m. For KMMM, I’m Nathan Langer.